Benefits of Cattle Enrichment

On pasture, cattle use trees to groom themselves and for scratching different body regions. Inside the dairy farm, lacking trees, dairy cows rub their bodies and mainly their heads and necks on metal gates, fences, and water troughs (1). There are advantages to improving the welfare and emotional state of dairy animals.

Brushes achieve better body cleanliness and improved milk yield (2).

Automatic brushes allow cattle to groom body regions that they find hard to reach otherwise (1) and are shown to be preferred over fixed brushes (3).

Provide an opportunity to engage in scratching/rubbing behaviour.
